Ginnie Bartlett has doubts about the arrangement her father made for her to be a mail-order bride to a rancher/widower with four young children in Dakota Territory. But with their southern plantation being destroyed after the war and no money to start anew, the Bartlett's are desperate, and they need Ginnie's intended to help them go west. When Ginnie and her family travel with a wagon train on the Oregon trail, she is worried about her future until she falls in love with a handsome travelling companion, Gavin, who saves her life and makes her an offer she does not want to refuse.

Will Ginnie choose love over her duty to her family?

What will become of all of them when her choice is made?
