A Citizens Manual For Amending the United States Constitution George Enice Lawhon

The Founders wanted what had never been but an idea and a theory in their books and a dream in their hearts, a living, breathing, process new to the world: Democracy. Whether you are a high school or college student, a lawyer, an engineer, a retail sales clerk, a doctor, a physical therapist, a nurse, a software developer, even a politician, you are a citizen of the United States of America. Your role and obligations as a citizen of this Republic are no different than that of the 55 men who gathered in Philadelphia 225 years ago to begin our Magnificent Experiment in Democracy. Like them, you should discuss, decide, and do. The game of Democracy is definitely still on. You, the People, hold all the cards that count.
