The novel opens as the mother, Pearl Tull, eighty-five (and at last no longer angry), is dying. Her musings carry us back thirty-five years to the day her traveling-salesman dandy of a husband left her. As she tries to hold together her family's disrupted lives, we see her children pummeled into adulthood through her excesses of maternal energy and spurts of terrifying rage: Handsome Cody, Wild and incorrigible, driven to cruel domination over his brother and ultimately possessed by the lure of power and money; high-spirited Jenny becoming a doctor, a pediatrician, nurturing strangers as she becomes more inaccessible to those close to her; and gentle Ezra, his mother's favorite, with a dream of a homesick restaurant "where people come just like to a family dinner" -except that whenever his own family gathers, meals are left unfinished, appetites dissipated in squabbles and tempests. What the passing of time does to the Tull's-what happens after Pearl's funeral when they assemble for the last time at Ezra's table.
